Starting from Izmir, at the heart of the Turkaegean, reveal a modern city with a rich history and diverse cultural identity cradle of love for his brother Eumenes Road. Because of its founder's suffering delivered to the "Church of Smyrna" is best witnessed in the city's ancient Philadelphia and Smyrna were the only two churches illustrious cities of the ancient world. Proceed to the UNESCO World Heritage Site of Pergamum, climb up to the Acropolis, and startle with the steepest theatre of the ancient world with a magnificent view below the Zeus Altar. Leaving the city stop by the Red Basilica, an Egyptian Temple, later converted to a church. Listen to the stories of the trade guilds and pagan celebrations at the remains of an ancient basilica of the ancient city of Thyatra, Akhisar. Heading south, a young city when compared to similar cities of Anatolia, Alagehir, ancient Philadelphia will meet you with some ruins of city walls composed of rough stone blocks and a basilica. It was built upon an elevated terrace above the valley heard of the Turkaegean, which lay on the Persian Royal Road. Because of its founder's love for his brother Eumenes II, the city was called Philadelphia which meant "the city of brotherly love". Philadelphia and Smyrna were the only two churches illustrious cities of the ancient world. About which nothing negative was said by John. A short drive among the vineyards of Gediz Valley will take you to Sardis, the ancient political and cultural centre of Anatolia, and the capital of the Kingdom of Lydia. A well-preserved temple of Artemis, a gymnasium and synagogue of the 2nd century alongside a gold-bearing stream dazzle the visitors. Further south to inland Aegean, Laodikeia is a stunning hidden gem of antiquity across the cotton white travertines of famed Pamukkale, a spa centre with its luke-warm waters since ancient days. Walk on the wooden path over remarkable mosaics of Anatolia's most unique churches in the early fourth century CE. The Laodikeia Church was a very important site for the Christian world.
